

Christine Tanzella

Christine Tanzella leads the research team at Berke, driven by an unrelenting passion for the executive search process. Equipped with a mix of innate talent and a passion for research, Christine treats each new assignment as an investigative process in the quest to identify precision-fit candidates.

Prior to Berke, Christine held several upper-management positions in the communications industry. In search of a new challenge, Christine later joined a boutique research firm, where she first began to craft and hone her skills. During this time, she collaborated with Susan Popp—who is now Berke's Managing Partner—on multiple projects, and then joined Susan when she launched Susan Popp & Associates, LLC. Now working for Berke, Christine brings a decade of solid research experience to the firm.

In her current role at Berke, Christine approaches each search the same way: she begins by understanding the hierarchy of our client's organizational structure as well as the position profile. This first step is essential in ensuring the candidates she identifies precisely align with the organization's culture, requirements, and goals. Christine then begins a search for candidates who possess the ideal mix of talent, skills, and experience, leveraging Berke's vast network and extensive resources. As the search progresses, Christine supplies our team with detailed reports that will ultimately enable us to identify the best possible candidates for our clients.
